

Black Americans, a Lineage and a Legacy in Limbo

Woni Spotts, ABD, M.A., B.A., Anthropology

Email: wonispotts@gmail.com

Date: May 7, 2026

DOI: 10.5281/zenodo.20064843

Subject Area: Black American History, African American History, Anthropology, Ethnic Studies, Indigenous Studies, Ethnocide, Erasure, Ethnogenesis, Black American Ethnicity, Melanesian, Austronesian, Native American

Keywords: Black American ethnogenesis, ethnicity, ethnocide, African American origins, Black American identity, indigenous, African American genome, Black American linguistics, Black American language, AAVE, BAVE, Creole, Tutnese, Manifest Destiny, Buffalo Soldiers

Abstract

The Black American ethnogenesis toiled, innovated, and created agricultural gold. Emancipated architects, bolstered by skilled labor, erected foundational infrastructure—railroads, bridges, roads, and cities. Defenders of the Western Frontier—segregated soldiers, cowboys, and lawmen set Manifest Destiny in motion. Fame rained upon the Earth through genius inventors, gifted entertainers, Olympic medalists, and culinary practitioners. Civil rights activists united around global humanitarianism and developed an international presence.

In an act of ethnocide, scholars declared Africans the genesis of Black American artistic expressions, physical prowess, and cuisines—soul food or Louisiana Creole—all without parallel exhibitions in musicianship, athletics, cookery, or benevolence. Chroniclers silenced the enslaved, shrouded the images of Wild West heroes, and buried the patents of pioneers. Newspapers hid fundamental architects, shunned sports champions, and framed philanthropists as traitors.

Black Americans, a Lineage and a Legacy in Limbo

Ethnicity

In phases, c. 80,000-23,000 BCE, Ancestral Australo-Melanesians carried genetics into the Americas, exhibited in Amazonians—Suruís, Karitianas, and Xavantes. Divergences coalesced with waves of Beringians and branched with dominant Ancestral Australo-Melanesian or Beringian traits in the Americas, c. 15,000 BCE.

Architects of the Trans-Atlantic slave trade, Africans, Europeans—missionaries and monarchies—imported West, Central, South, East, and nomadic Africans into the Americas. Locked in chains, the abducted marched under guard from inland regions into dungeons. The Dahomey thrust the shackled toward the Tree of Forgetfulness. Bound to prevent mutinies, captives walked through Doors of No Return onto slave ships headed for the Middle Passage.

Black Americans emerged through ethnogenesis in North America, with haplogroups from Europe, maternal-H, U, K, T, paternal-R1b, I, J, North America, maternal-A, B, C, D, paternal-Q, Africa, maternal-L, paternal-E1b1a/E-V38, and Asia, Oceania, paternal-M, O, from Ancestral Australo-Melanesians, “Manila Men” in Louisiana, and Malagasies genetics.

On plantations, procreation produced bi-racial and tri-racial progeny, while waves of Europeans, Christianized Ancestral Australo-Melanesians, Beringian descendants, and Free People of Color—by birth or independent liberation—formed tri-racial isolates.

Beringian descendants and Black Americans marched on the Trail of Tears to Oklahoma. The Cherokee Nation broke the Treaty of 1866, which promised tribal citizenship for Cherokee Freedmen and an end to slavery. In tri-racial and quad-racial isolates, Free People of Color and non-English Europeans coalesced on ancestral lands under the threat of violence or enslavement.

A proponent of the “one drop rule,” Walter A. Plecker compiled a surname blacklist to reclassify races on birth certificates. Isolates: Mitsawoketts, Nanticokes, Lenni-Lenapes, Melungeons, Ramps, Dominikers, Montauks, Mantinecocks, Van Guilders, Poospatucks, Lumbees, Croatans, Clappers, Shinnecoicks, Waccamaws, Haliwas, Redbones, Buckheads, Yellowhammers, Creoles, Cajuns, Ramapos/Ramapoughs, Jackson Whites, Narragansetts, Gay Heads, Powhatans, Mashpees, Carmelites, Piscataway Conoy, Guineas, Turks, Pooles, Chickahominy, Smilings, Chavises, Creels, Brass Ankles, Redlegs, Rapides, Sabines, St. Landry Mulattoes, Zwolle-Ebards, Bushwhackers, Rockingham Surry Group, Vinton County Group, Darke County Group, Keating Mountain Group, Karthus Half-Breeds, Saponis/Sapponys, Upper Mattaponis, Patawomecks, Rappahannocks, N—er-Hill People...

"To aid all of you in determining just which are the mixed families, we have made a list of their surnames by counties and cities, as complete as possible at this time. This list should be preserved by all, even by those in counties and cities not included, as these people are moving around over the State and changing race at the new place." -Walter A. Plecker, Department of Health, Bureau of Vital Statistics.

"It's sometimes embarrassing to see the lengths your ancestors went to hide their African heritage, but look at the consequences." "They suffered anyway because of the suspicion." -Wayne Winkler, past president of the Melungeon Heritage Association.

"A traditional Eurocentric bias that lumps undifferentiated masses of "Africans" into one single category and undifferentiated masses of "Indians" into another, while making fine distinctions among the different populations of Europe, permits the ignoring of cases in which genocide against Africans and American Indians has resulted in the total extermination—purposefully carried out—of entire cultural, social, religious, and ethnic groups." -David E. Stannard, American Holocaust: Columbus and the Conquest of the New World.

After the Emancipation Proclamation, the legal statuses of slave and Free People of Color combined into Freedmen, an indigenous ethnogenesis within the United States of America before 1865, identified as Black American, African American, Negro, Colored, Afro-American, and Mulatto.

"Black Americans...a boat stop away from the Caribbean."

Ships from Africa anchored in the Caribbean "broke" or "seasoned" the enslaved before the journey to North America. A distinct isolated generational culture in North America determined ethnicity, as opposed to waypoints on an ocean voyage.

Overseers with African ancestry dominated Caribbean, Central American, and South American plantations with absentee ownership. Europeans outnumbered Black Americans, and force bred the captives to produce twice the birthrate of Caribbeans. Under the protection of the Catholic Church, Caribbeans, Central Americans, and South Americans sought refuge from the horrors of slavery, paid for freedom, structured racial castes, and married. Caribbeans, Central Americans, and South Americans observe European Catholic Lent festivals—Carnival, J'ouvert... Jamaicans cook with Indian curry and practice Rastafarianism, the aesthetic of Ethiopian holy men—dreadlocks, ganja, and a green, yellow, and red flag. The region exhibited European and Asian last names, eugenics, mejorar la raza, mottos, "Out of many, one people," and songs, "One Love," performed by Bob Marley. The United States of America adopted the one-drop rule. While Blues artist Billie Holiday sang "Strange Fruit," Caribbeans serenaded bananas, "Banana Boat or Day-O."

Origins

Diaspora, Greek διασπορά, conveyed the scattering of seeds in a botanical sense. Immigrant, Latin immigrāre, noted a deliberate movement into a place. Descent, Latin descendere, represented movement downward. When immigrants from a traditional land volunteered to establish a diaspora with intact familial connections, surnames, language, religion, and lineage, descendants emerged.

In Horace's Odes, Carmina, the phrase "niger rudentis Euris inverso mari" translated to "let the black eastern wind turn the sea upside-down," an early connection to niger and the color black, c. 23-13 BCE. The English word neger, an older form of negro from the Middle French and Spanish words nègre and negro, surfaced in the context of the Trans-Atlantic slave trade, c. 1,500 CE. Negro appeared in the book Decades of the New World, Richard Eden, c. 1,555 CE. Edward Hellowes translated "Los negros en Ethiopia" to "The Nigers of Aethiop." "The King and People of [“Serra Leona”] Ni--ers, simple and harmless."-East India Company, an English letter written, c. 1,608 CE. Europeans referred to Africans as "n—ers" in private correspondence. An American Revolution ballad, "Adam's Fall: The Trip to Cambridge, 1775," depicted a diverse army unit, c. 1,775 CE. "The rebel clowns, oh! What a sight! Too awkward was their figure. 'Twas yonder stood a pious wight, and here and there n—er."

Black—the color of night, deep space, and the richest soil on earth. In Eastern cultures, black symbolizes power, protection, and mystery. Black belts in martial arts and black religious clothes demand authority.

Dutch colonists named 130 acres in Manhattan the Land of the Blacks/Land van de Zwarte, c. 1,640 CE.

Black Power: A Record of Reactions in a Land of Pathos -Richard Wright, 1954.

Militant Civil Rights leader, Robert F. Williams, formed the foundation for "Black Power" with the Crusader newspaper and Negros with Guns, early 1962.

Negroes Should Take Pride in Themselves -The Pittsburgh Courier, March 29, 1958.

Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee—SNCC organizers and activists chanted, "Be Black and proud!" while newsletters called for Black Pride, 1966.

Say It Loud—I'm Black and I'm Proud, James Brown, 1968

The terms Englishman, Scotsman, Frenchman, and “Chinaman” labeled nationalities. The “Orient” characterized a region, rugs, and the Orient Express. Over time, “Oriental” and “Chinaman” turned into slurs. Mongolians strongly protested when physicians named the genetic disorder, Down syndrome, “Mongolism.”

“For a Samurai to be brave, he must have a bit of black blood.” -Japanese proverb.

The Saisiyat in Taiwan perform the Ritual of the Little Black People. Chinese scribes documented a race of “Black Dwarfs” in the Three Kingdoms Period, c. 220-280 CE, through the Qing Dynasty Period, c. 1,644-1,911 CE.

“What astonished me was the Ethiopic type which it represents. I reflected that there had undoubtedly been blacks in this country.” -José María Melgar y Serrano.

“He was all black, even as I tell ye: his head, his body, and his hands were all black, saving only his teeth.” -Middle Dutch literature on Sir Morien.

“Their faces were black as pitch, the handsomest amongst them was as black as a cooking pot.” -Primera Cronica General in Alfonso X on the Moors.

“The Egyptians said that they considered the Colchians part of Sesostri’s army. I myself guessed it, partly because they are dark-skinned and woolly-haired; though that indeed counts for nothing, since other peoples are, too; but my better proof was that the Colchians and Egyptians and Ethiopians are the only nations that have from the first practiced circumcision.” -Herodotus, the Histories.

Herodotus, a Greek scholar, named the inhabitants of South Asia, India, Indoi or Ivoi, c. 484-425 BCE. Columbus described Caribbeans as “West Indians.”

Linguistics

Spoken all over the planet, the Black American dialect expressed complex concepts with fewer words. Traced to the Caspian Steppe, proto-Indo-European language evolved into Old English, c. 450-1,150 CE. Characterized as outsiders, the Black American collective inherited the genetics of European colonists to affect Middle to Modern English, c. 1,150–1,700 CE, with Gullah Geechee, Louisiana Creole, Afro-Seminole Creole, and Tutnese—a secret language spoken by the enslaved.

Europeans in North America shifted from Scandinavian, Slavic, and Romance languages to English.

Velvet vocal resonances produced celebrated singers, DJs, rappers, orators, and narrators in advertisements, documentaries, television, and cinema—Roots, Star Wars...

The New Cab Calloway's Cat-ologue: A Hepster's Dictionary, c. 1,939 CE.

Jazz artists added depth to English and foretold future music genres—Hip-Hop, Rock, Funk... Lester Young, a legendary saxophonist, used “cool” to signify a calm and collected state of mind. Danny Barker, the “Banjo King of New Orleans,” evoked “Funky Butt,” or “Buddy Bolden's Blues,” “dancing close together and belly rubbing.”

Aesthetic

As an act of rebellion against Eurocentric beauty standards, afros crowned kings and queens. Braids graced disco divas and inspired the blockbuster film 10. The Commodores' “Brick House” and Sir Mix-a-Lot's “Baby Got Back” revered sensual curves, brown skin, and full lips. James Brown's “Say it Loud, I'm Black, and I'm Proud” and activist chants “Black is Beautiful” and “Black Power” championed pride.

Traditional Textile

Negro cloth, a traditional attire designed for the enslaved. The Boston Manufacturing Company stitched a coarse fabric as a symbol of bondage and status. Factories depended on cotton and Indigofera tinctoria plants, “blue gold” harvested and processed on plantations by the enslaved. A uniform of oppression soared to the heights of fashion around the globe.

Foundation

For centuries, agriculturists born in bondage toiled to create fertile fields of gold. The explosive growth from agricultural wealth led to the development of ports, railroads, and urban areas, built by Black American architects, craftsmen, and laborers. Railroad companies used the enslaved to lay over 10,000 miles of train tracks in the South and East, compared to 700 miles of rail laid in the West by paid foreign laborers.

Propagandistic newspapers, railroads, and photographers coordinated to advertise, transport crowds, and print macabre souvenir postcards to document the violent spectacles of lynch mobs.

Before the Reconstruction era and the Great Migration, Black Americans raised historic districts with businesses, universities, restaurants, and nightclubs in cities, suburbs, and rural areas in every state. Barbershops buzzed with the sound of quartets in harmony.

Hundreds of revolts, escapes, and mutinies changed politics with the rise of abolitionists and activists—Frederick Douglass, Harriet Tubman, Sojourner Truth, and Robert Smalls.

Military and the Western Frontier

Segregated soldiers served with honor and distinction in North American wars.

"Without the military help of the Black Freedmen, the war against the South could not have been won" -President Abraham Lincoln.

From the book, "The Black Military Experience" by Robert E. Washington.

"The contributions of the Black troops were so significant that it is safe to say that the war would not have been won without their help." -President Abraham Lincoln.

"The bare sight of fifty thousand armed and drilled black soldiers on the banks of the Mississippi would end the rebellion at once." -President Abraham Lincoln.

Inspired by the Emancipation Proclamation and the Civil War victory, French abolitionists erected the Statue of Liberty.

The Buffalo Soldiers constructed national parks, protected settlers, stagecoaches, wagon trains, and railroads. Regiments patrolled, paved roads, drew maps, blazed trails, fought fires, and removed livestock, rustlers, poachers, and loggers. Against a backdrop of the open range, humble ranch hands tended herds, rode horses, and roped cattle on drives. On the rugged Western frontier, the status of "cowboy" carried a word to emasculate, "boy."

Inventions and Innovations

While Afrocentrics praised ancient Africans, Black Americans invented, attended 101+ HBCUs, and registered 50,000+ patents in the United States of America, c. 1,800-1,900 CE. Labor and intellect underpinned industry and science. Innovations improved productivity, while advanced cultivation practices increased yields. Thought of as mere hammers, architects and laborers built foundational infrastructures. Lewis Latimer's U.S. Patent No. 252,386, c. 1,882 CE, turned an experimental project—the incandescent light bulb—into a revolutionary technology used in homes, streets, and businesses. A polymath, patent investigator, expert witness, and assistant to Alexander Graham Bell, Latimer drafted blueprints for the telephone. Described as “human computers,” NASA mathematicians performed complex calculations for the moon landing.

Humanitarianism

On the international stage, Black American philanthropy shone through schools, churches, and charitable concerts—We Are The World. The historic presence of segregated armed forces, united with iconic performances by Olympians, artists, and entertainers, established an honorable reputation across the planet.

Activists spearheaded the Civil Rights Acts of 1957-1968 and the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1965. The Black Panthers aligned with the American Indian Movement and the United Farm Workers. Frederick Douglass protested the Yellow Peril propaganda and the Chinese Exclusion Act. John C. Robinson, “The Father of the Tuskegee Airmen,” commanded the Imperial Ethiopian Air Force against Italy and co-founded Ethiopian Airlines. The Congressional Black Caucus petitioned against Apartheid.

Years later, the Five Civilized Tribes revoked citizenship from Freedmen. The League of United Latin American Citizens clashed with Black American civil rights activists. Chinese—Students for Fair Admissions sued institutions with the goal to challenge Black American attendance. NAACP leaders, Congressional Black Caucus members, HBCU faculty, and scholarship committees drifted away from Black Americans toward foreigners. Pan-Africans, CARICOM, and the African Union used centuries of Black American suffrage to demand reparations for the descendants of slave sellers. Africans generate wealth from slave memorials—castles, dungeons, doors of no return, and museums.

Religion and Customs

A sanctuary from the storm, churches acted as spaces to share plant medicine, education, and music. On fertile grounds, congregants cultivated economic cooperation, political activism, and legal advocacy against Jim Crow laws and medical apartheid.

In symbolic marriage ceremonies, enslaved couples “jumped the broom.”

The emancipated kept the names of enslavers or selected famous figures, Biblical heroes, geographical places, and later, Afrocentric, Arabic, Hebrew, and Moorish identifiers.

Sports

Born out of a tradition of segregated leagues, Black Americans broke barriers in over fifty sports and competitions. From Olympic podiums to boxing rings, rodeo arenas, tennis courts, and NASCAR tracks, champions exuded humility and class. A mystique formed around power salutes, stare-downs, confident struts, insider handshakes, and activism. Across six continents, taunts, groans, and jeers roared from the crowds. Flamed from survival, triumph, and freedom, a phenomenon unique to American soil, contenders displayed raw talent and iron will in a myriad of disciplines. Victories rarely translated into ownership, endorsement, or institutional power. Heroes existed, hidden in the footnotes of history, record books, and halls of fame. The research presents chronological evidence of international athletic dominance.

Black Americans used the words "First Black" to celebrate milestones under oppression. "Black" refers to descendants freed by the Emancipation Proclamation in the United States of America. Foreigners left countries governed by African descendants and chose to live in the belly of the beast. "First Black" encapsulates the power of Black Americans.

Music

Publishing and recording dates show Black Americans created every music genre in the United States of America: Work Songs, Spirituals, Barbershop Quartets, Ragtime, Jazz, Big Band, Swing, Scat, Bebop, Blues, Boogie Woogie, Jump Blues Country Bluegrass, Rock n' Roll, Punk, Grunge, Rhythm and Blues, R&B, Doo-Wop Boy Bands, Soul, Funk, Disco, Motown Sound, Philadelphia Sound, House, Electric, Rap, Hip Hop, and International genres, Latin Jazz, Ska, Reggae, HighLife, and Afrobeat.

From quiet whispers to roars, books and articles declared Caribbeans and Latinos the originators of Hip Hop, an assertion challenged by a clear evolution. Researchers discovered "No More Doggin" by Rosco Gordon, accented on the off beats. Johnny Nash, an American, delivered the first international Reggae hits, and signed the symbol of the genre, Bob Marley, to JAD Records. Fela Kuti the founder of Afrobeat, met with Black Americans and left with a muse, a political ideology, and a music genre, documented in Secret Origins of Black Americans by Woni Spotts.

Afrocentrics spoke three words, call and response, to bestow Black American music genres upon Africans. History recorded bajars in Mesopotamia, Egypt, and later, West Africa. The enslaved carved string instruments from materials found in the environment. Artists expressed the depths of despair to the euphoria of freedom.

Eurocentrics asserted authorship of Black American entertainment through European musical customs and fashion. String, wind, and percussive instruments developed globally, and concepts for the Greek Pythagorean scale originated in Egypt. Elements of suits converged on the Silk Road, with Chinese split-legged garments, Persian, Egyptian, and Steppe nomad coats. While Afrocentrics presented black-eyed peas and okra, an East African vegetable, to display the African origins in Black American cuisines, European explorers collected cultural capital—Egyptian theories, Eurasian attire, and plants from the Americas—tomatoes, chocolate... used in Italian cuisine and Belgian confections.

Before the Country genre, enslaved folk musicians developed a distinct down-stroke—clawhammer or frailing technique on stringed instruments exclusively handmade by Black Americans, c. 1,600-1,800 CE. Phil Jamison's book Hoedowns, Reels, and Frolics: Roots and Branches of Southern Appalachian Dance discovered archival evidence of Black American dance callers, hoedowns, square dances, fiddlers, and banjo players in the Southern Appalachia, c. 1,690-1,800 CE. European descendant Americans mocked Black Americans in minstrel shows and later adopted the traditions. Artists painted the enslaved as musicians, "The Old Plantation," John Rose, c. 1,785 CE. As award shows, halls of fame, and academics honored interpretations, the stars of the genres sat in the audience.

Promoters named Black American music genres "Western," "Hillbilly," "Appalachian," "global," under the parallel system, "race records." For centuries, propagandists ridiculed banjo players, fried chicken, watermelon, dialect, intellect, laziness, and appearance in minstrel or vaudeville shows.

"Our music (jazz) is strictly white man's music...My contention is that the Negroes learned to play this rhythm and music from the whites...The Negro did not play any kind of music equal to white men at any time." -Band Leader, Nick LaRocca.

The United States of America, the United Kingdom, NAZI Germany, Italy, Japan, China, and Russia enacted laws and global campaigns to censor Black American music with the terms, "n—er music," "music of the lower races," "jungle music," and "enemy music."

"Monkey talk, jungle squeals, grunts and squeaks, and gasps suggestive of calf love are camouflaged by a few feverish notes and admitted in homes where the thing itself, unaided by scanned music," would be stamped out in horror. The fluttering music sheets disclose expressions taken directly from the cesspools of modern capitals, to be made the daily slang, the thoughtlessly hummed remarks of school boys and girls." -Henry Ford.

Soul Food and Louisiana Creole Cuisine

From stark slave quarters to stately plantation kitchens, agricultural geniuses raised chickens, cultivated plants, honed culinary techniques, and crafted a unique world-class cuisine. Chefs published the first cookbooks—Hotel Keepers, Head Waiters, and Housekeepers' Guide, Tunis Campbell, c. 1,848 CE. A Domestic Cook Book, Malinda Russell, c. 1,866 CE, and What Mrs. Fisher Knows About Old Southern Cooking, Abby Fisher, c. 1,881 CE. LeRoi Jones coined the term "soul food," which described a collection of dishes mastered for half a millennium, c. 1,962 CE.

Historians wove folktales around chefs assembled near a cast-iron cauldron. After Portuguese traders visited a lavish Louisiana estate, the French stirred the roux. In the moment, Choctaws infused sassafras flavor, while Spaniards drizzled olive oil into the African-simmered okra. Once the work of fiction faded under the light, culture bearers with an ancestral mosaic appeared—Black American Creoles.

Soul Food and Louisiana Creole dishes—baked macaroni and cheese, fried chicken, cornbread, jambalaya and gumbo—stood apart from traditional cookbooks in Africa, South America, the Caribbean, Oceania, Asia, or Europe.

Willed to Thomas Jefferson, James Hemings, "The Father of Macaroni and Cheese," apprenticed in France, perfected cheeses, sauces, meringues..., and reigned as the first master chef in America. Far from a global flatbread, cornbread elevated maize as a leavened savory cake. Artisans crafted leavened biscuits, gravy, mashed potatoes, pastry dough, and meats fried in seasoned batter.

Since antiquity in the Americas, wild game, flavored by wood ash, wild onion, sassafras, or sumac, braised in hickory oil, and nut milk—cooked over open fires. In bondage, children stoked labor-intensive 24-hour fires and smoked meats guided by elder "pitmasters" on plantations. Barbecue halls of fame awarded Black Americans for grill techniques, woods, flavors, and traditions.

Conclusion

With broken family trees, fallen branches took root and bonded with the land. As blood and bones melded into the soil, a fearless phoenix rose from the ashes. Shaped under the forces of nature, ancestral currents sparked an alchemical reaction of rock-bottom pain and glimmers of hope. As the planet stirred, revolutionary inventions, celebrated cuisines, athletic legends, iconic music, and the concepts of universal humanitarianism and civil rights circled the globe at the speed of light.

References

- Allard, Marc, A. (2005). Characterization of human control region sequences of the African American SWGDAM forensic mtDNA data set. Retrieved from <https://pubmed.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/15639612/>
- Boyle, Alan (2013). African-American's Y chromosome sparks a shift in evolutionary timetable. Retrieved from <https://www.nbcnews.com/sciencemain/african-americans-y-chromosome-sparks-shift-evolutionary-timetable-1C8710411south>
- Calloway, Cab (1939) — The New Cab Calloway's Cat-ologue: A Hepster's Dictionary — documents Black American slang as a distinct lexicon
- Domingues da Silva, Daniel B. (2019). Memories of Madagascar and Slavery in the Black Atlantic by Wendy Wilson-Fall. Retrieved from <https://muse.jhu.edu/article/751204/pdf>.
- Encyclopedia.com. Triracial Isolates. Retrieved from <https://www.encyclopedia.com/social-sciences/encyclopedias-almanacs-transcripts-and-maps/triracial-isolates>
- Kayser, Manfred. (2003). Y Chromosome STR Haplotypes and the Genetic Structure of U.S. Populations of African, European, and Hispanic Ancestry.
- McIlwain, Gloria (1995) — African American English: A Linguistic Introduction
- Montagu, Ashley. (1944). Physical Characters of the American Negro. The Scientific Monthly, 59(1), 56–62. Retrieved from <http://www.jstor.org/stable/18505>.
- Science.org. (2014). Genetic Study Reveals Surprising Ancestry of Many Americans. Retrieved from <https://www.science.org/content/article/genetic-study-reveals-surprising-ancestry-many-americans>.
- Skoglund, Pontus. (2015). Retrieved from <https://www.nature.com/articles/nature14895>.
- Spotts, W. (2023). Secret Origins of Black Americans.
- University of Pennsylvania (2009). Genetic study clarifies African and African-American ancestry. Retrieved from <https://www.eurekalert.org/news-releases/504898>
- Weslager, C.A. (2006). Delaware's Forgotten Folk: The Story of the Moors and Nanticokes.